is. He's got something in there about state colleges. Maybe everybody ought to stand up and declare what it is they are interested in, although they need not. Maybe they like all these programs, which I doubt. But it's for them to decide how they are going to comport themselves during this lengthy discussion because I am not going to be deterred from what I think I need to do and the way that I think I need to do it. I think on issues of this kind, we sometimes proceed with far too much haste. We need to slow down, take our time, and carefully analyze these and other issues. How many times have people seen me have to batter a bill and batter it, and they get tired. Then finally the introducer would say, you know now that I look at that, the bill can be improved in this way, and I agree that we will do it this way. We reach a consensus. We compromise. I leave the bill alone, even though I don't get everything in or out of that bill that I choose and the bill moves. Senator Hudkins had a bill that I didn't like, the "needler" bill. I didn't like it but she worked on the main concerns that I had and I left her bill alone in terms of trying to do everything I could to stop it. I just kind of needled it a little bit along the way, but she got her bill. Senator Quandahl brought an atrocity in here and he, by the time we got through with it, it was atrocious but not an atrocity anymore. That's the way things are done on the floor of the Legislature when you have somebody like me as a member. I take an interest in practically everything that comes across for various reasons.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Sometimes it's the content of the bill. Sometimes it's the way the bill is drafted. But at any rate, I do my work as I think I should and I know that some of my friends will have ruffled feathers. That's a quote from former Mayor Hal Daub. When you make difficult decisions, difficult decisions, sometimes feathers get ruffled, and I just want to acknowledge on the day of his demise that he is gone but not forgotten. Maybe he doesn't want to be remembered in that way. But from the discussion thus far from those who have spoken, you're going to hold firm as a body to keep all these items in, but I don't know whether you strengthen your chances of an override or weaken them. I will have to continue as I see fit,
